DIETETIC INTERNSHIP

EDUCATION FOR FOOD MANAGEMENT

FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY
TALLAHASSEE, FLORIDA
1952
THE FLORIDA STATE UNIVERSITY has a diversified program for education in various phases of food work. The School of Home Economics, the Department of Restaurant and Hotel Management, and the Department of Baking Science and Management train students in nutrition, food management and the problems of food industries.

We have long recognized the educational soundness of practical training for students, and since 1927 the internship program has been a part of the curriculum.

By participating in the dietetic internship and by taking graduate courses in one of the above departments, students may later select positions of trust and responsibility in the business and professional world.

President, Florida State University
The administrative dietetic internship at Florida State University gives the graduates of accredited colleges and universities opportunities for practical experience, under supervision, as the last step in professional preparation for careers in food work. The intern on this campus is at the same time a graduate student, and takes course work for graduate credit in the School of Business, the Department of Nutrition, or the Department of Restaurant and Hotel Management.

The University food service units provide the work opportunities for the interns, and the food service staff directs the program. The University operates two cafeterias with a la carte and fixed price meals, a public school lunchroom, a snack bar, a soda fountain, a short order restaurant, and provides banquet and catering services for University functions. The interns participate in large quantity food production, in managerial work, and in the directing of personnel. They rank as junior staff members, and are paid a small stipend during the training period. An intern may elect to stay on at Florida State University at the completion of his internship and work for an advanced degree. If part time work is desired while completing graduate work, the Dining Hall will make every effort to provide it.

Applicants for admission must have a Bachelor's degree from a college or university of recognized rank with a major in Nutrition or Institution Management. In addition, applicants must present the sequence of undergraduate course work set as minimum requirements by the American Dietetic Association for entrance into internships approved by the Executive Board of the Association. Students who successfully complete the course are eligible for membership in the American Dietetic Association.
Graduates of the Florida State University administrative dietetic internship are holding good positions in many phases of food work. The list includes college and university food services, public school lunchrooms, industrial cafeterias, department store restaurants, U. S. Army food services, and hospitals in the administrative phases of food service.

During the internship period there is time for recreation. All campus social functions open to students are open to the intern. Facilities and equipment for such year-round sports as tennis, golf, archery, boating, bowling, and indoor swimming are available. Other activities include a graduate student club, dances, informal parties, concerts, lectures, plays, and intercollegiate games. Located on campus are the art gallery, museum, "Little Theatre," and music library, where the best in recorded music may be heard.
